Ten Very Royal Gifts for Kate, William, and Baby

JULY 12, 2013

Britain (and the rest of the celebrity-worshiping world) is gripped with royal baby mania as Kate Middleton is due to give birth any.day.now. Can you handle the excitement as the third person in line to the British throne (that is essentially a ceremonial role) is about to be born? You sure can't. Neither can we!

And although this kid isn't going to want for anything (it's going to live in a literal palace—not the type of palace that you refer to when you visit someone's obscenely large home in Boca Raton, a real, honest-to-god palace with servants and jewels and creepy portraits of its grandmother everywhere)... rich people still like gifts, and rumor has it that rich babies love gifts.

So, we've put together a gift guide for the royal baby (gender unknown, after much speculation) as well as gifts for William and Kate (hey, they did all the work, right?).

And while royal babies have been historically raised by an army of nannies, it's not much of a stretch to think William and Kate would be more hands-on parents. They're modern! They do their own grocery shopping! William ate at McDonald's as a kid once because Diana took him there! And if they're going to be hands-on with their newborn baby, they're going to need the same things that all new parents need: caffeine, booze, and noise-cancelling headphones.

2. Aviation Gin: William will appreciate this gift for two reasons: 1). all new parents look at booze as their new lifeblood. A way to de-stress, a way to relax, and a way to remember your former carefree, childless life when you didn't so rabidly cherish time in the shower because it's the only alone time you get all day; 2.) Prince William is a pilot in the Royal Airforce, so he will appreciate AVIATION Gin, even if it's billed as "American gin."
